Another Kentucky Feud.

Floyd county, Ky., which adjoins Pike on the south, has made a beginning in a feud that bids fair to equal in the amount of bloodshed, the Hatfield-McCoy war. Two men have been shot dead so far, and the friends of each are now under arms, as the people there say when men carry deadly weapons with them constantly.

John Hall, a man living on Prayer Creek, Floyd county, was accused about a year ago of breaking into a store at Prestonsburg, the county seat. An indictment was found, and a warrant was issued for his arrest and placed in the hands of Deputy Sheriff Jake Hollifield. Hollifield, according to the custom of the country, notified Hall that the warrant was out, and set May 10th as the day for making the arrest. It is not in good form, according to the rules of mountain society, to arrest a gentleman or to attempt an arrest without previously notifying him of the intent, unless the arrest is for murder.
A failure to observe social requirements in such cases is always resented with a rifle by society leaders, unless the officer happens to get a drop on his victim. In that case the arrested man's friends are accustomed to resent the ill-bred officer's act at the first opportunity. But Hall was not of the sort to appreciate Mr.
Hollifield's courtesy. Instead of gracefully submitting to the law and treating the officer to a glass of moonshine he barricaded his doors when the officer approached.
Then as Hollifield advanced to knock on the door Hall shot him dead through a crack between the logs of the house wall.
Two other men who had gone along with Hollifield to make the arrest fled at the first fire. Hollifield's body laid in Hall's yard until the next day, when some of Hall's friends carried it to town and it was buried.
A reward of $500 was offered for Hall's arrest for killing an officer who was simply discharging his duty in a courteous manner.
Stimulated by the reward and armed with a warrant and two repeating rifles, Deputy Sheriff's Cicerio Cox and Sam Marrs of Prestonsburg started after Hall the last week in August. Hall was suddenly met in the woods as they neared his home.
He was laying out as the term is here-- staying in the woods to avoid the officers-- and he had a cousin named Canada Tipton with him. Hall and Tipton saw the officers as soon as the officers saw them, and both sides began to shoot at once. Sam Marrs says he demanded Hall's surrender first, and that he did not shoot until after both Hall and Tipton had fired at him. Then he shot at Tipton and missed. Cox shot Hall dead the third fire. Tipton escaped. Hall's relatives say, on Tipton's authority, that no demand for surrender was made, and that Hall was shot dead from an ambush, without ever having a chance to defend himself.
Hall had a great funeral, and his relatives mourn him as one foully dealt with.

When Cox and Marrs returned to town and reported to County Judge Harris what they had done, a respectable citizen who was a distant relative of the Hall family, was sent to the Halls over on Prayer Creek, speaking with a flag of truce. No one else dared go. He said to the Halls:
"Jake Hollifield is dead, so is John Hall.
Jake was killed first, but Jake's friends and Cox's friends and Sam Marrs's friends are willing to let the matter drop if you are.
They want peace."

This little speech, word for word, was repeated to Hall's father, John, sr. He replied with an eagerness for peace that made the friends of both Marrs and Cox clean up their arms. He tried to allay their suspicions, but overrode the matter. Marrs and Cox never leave their homes without repeating rifles in their hands. At the last term of court held in Prestonsburg, the last week in September, both were in attendance as officials, and both went about their duties carrying rifles.

It is confidently believed that the Halls will lay Cox and Marrs at the first opportunity. No difference who is killed-- and some one is sure to be--his friends will continue the feud until one side is extermi-
